

Hi my name is John Smith and I am the operations manager for Storage Post. We operate storage facilities within five states. Snow plowing is definitely the most challenging when trying to stay within a budget, and not knowing if our vendors are actually fulfilling their services as billed.

In the past, we noticed an increase in spending. As the snow bills were noticeably getting higher, we became very curious. During a snow event, we had relied on a time sheet between our store managers and the snow removal provider. But after hours, weekends, and during delayed openings, we had no way of showing proof that the invoices corresponded with the services being rendered.

There is always that grey line when companies get too comfortable during long winter seasons.
